A correspondent of the London Speciator

A Good Dog Story.

writes that this story of a dog's sagacity may be relied upon as true: During the meeting of the British Aesociation at Glasgow, a friend of mine had occasion to go one day from that place to Greenock on business. Hearing on his arrival, that the person he wished to see was cut, but expected shortly to return home he determined to take a stroll about the town to which he was a stranger. In the course of his walk he turned into a baker's shop and bought a bun. As he stood at the door of the shop eating his bun a large dog came up to him and begged for a share, which he got and seemed to enjoy, coming back for piece after piece. "Does the dog belong to you?" my friend asked of the shop woman. "No," sue answered, but he spends most of the time here, and begs half-pennies from the people who pass. "Half-pennies! What good can they do him?" Oh. he knows very well what to do with them he c mes into the shop and buys cakes!" This seemed rather a remarkable instance of cleverness even for the eleverest of animals; so, by way of testing its reality, my friend went out of the shop into the street, where he was immediately accested by the dog, who begged for something with all the elequence of which a dog is capable. He offered him a halfpenny and was rather surprised to see him accept it readily and walk with the air of a regular customer into the shop, where he put his fore paws on the counter and held out the halfpenny toward the attendant. The young wo-man produced a bun, but that did not suit the dog, and held his money fast. "Ah," said she,
'I know what ne wants," and took down from a shelf a plate of short-bread. I his was right; the dog paid his half-penny, took his short bread and ste it with satisfaction. When he had quite floished he lelt the shop, and my friend, much amused, followed him, and when he again begged, found another half penny for him, and saw the whole process gone through a second time. This dog clearly had learned by some means the use of money, and not merely that it would buy something to eat, but that it would buy several things, among which he could exercise a right of choice. What is perhaps most remarkable is tust his proceedings were entire y independent and for his own benefit, not that in, the famous Russian actor, will be found the following characteristic anecdate of the late Emperor Nicholas. His M j sty happened one day to be engaged in inspecting a State ponitentiary in one of the provincial seats of government, and took it into his head to question some of the course s resp c ing the nature of the off-nces for which they were suff ring punishment: "What are you here for?" he punishment: "What are you here for the asked of one. "I am indoord, Imperial Majesty," replied the prisoner, failing on his knees; "a victim of fa'se withers! A church was subbed—a head the peasan's caught boli of me and I knew taxes nothing about it." Turning to another, my the Czer asked, "And y a?" "False witness again, Imperial Maj sty. A pedler was done for, close to my house. I cover even dreamt of such a thing." "And you?" said Nicholas, to a third. "Sheer malice, stre. One of my neighbors conveyed a lot of ferged notes into my pockets, and hid away a lithographic stone in my bedroom. I am as innocent as an unborn babe." The Emperor obviously bored by these successive protestations of guildessness, cast a glance along the line of prisoce:s until his eye fell upon a ragged, wretched looking gypsy, whom he beckened forward with the words, "Of course you, too, are here on a false charge?" "Not a bit of it, your Majesty," replied the Tsigan; "it's all fair and square as far as I am concerned. I stole a pony trom a tradesman." "Stole a pony, did you?" said the Czar with a laugh, and then, addressing the governor of the prision with well assumed steroness. said: "Turn that good for nothing rascal instantly out of doors. I cannot allow him to remain a minute longer in such honorable and virtuous company, lest he per vert all those good innocent prople!"—London
